

Dear Productivity Commission,

I'm a first year student and MIBT Deakin

It doesn't necessarily affect me personally, but I am so passionate about future jobs for Australia and passionate about the car industry, I think it would be extremely sad to see it go, and long with all that history

It would have a massive effect on Australian jobs, as well as Australia losing its independence of making things. It would also have a damaging effect to the Australian economy, and for whatever reason, Australia has to go to war or protect its country and we can't make things to protect us, then we are screwed especially if we can't get supplies from other countries

I'm proud of Australia, how loyal most of us are, I'm proud to buy things locally made, instead of everything coming from CHINA, I'm proud how independent we are. If all of this goes, then we will lose people's jobs, the skills and sadly the history will be lost. And being passionate about cars it will be sad to see the iconic Falcon and Commodore nameplates gone.

Kind Regards,
Luke Murray
