

Dear Productivity Commission,

I am working in the automotive industry as an engineer

My job will be gone. Not only that a lot of my friends would loss their jobs too. It takes a long time to find a new jobs that required the same skill-sets.

Australia will no longer making high tech products, in fact slowly all the know-hows in manufacturing industries will be loss. It will take decades to bring it back when required in the future since our economy cannot just consuming products made by overseas.

I reckon Government should look around the world to understand how automotive industry works. This industry needs government supports to compete with developing countries. However, It brings lot more back in terms of technology, economy and jobs in the future. Otherwise, Japan, Germany and US will longer be making any cars now.

Kind Regards,
Joseph Lim