

To The Commissioners

As an author published in Australia I write to express my concern at the review of Australia's copyright laws by the Productivity Commission. I believe that the current healthy state of Australia's publishing industry is a direct result of the amendments made to the Copyright Act in 1991, in particular the 30/90-day rule which relates to territorial copyright. Any further alteration or amendment to the Act would prove, both culturally and economically, detrimental to me personally and to the publishing industry as a whole.

Yours faithfully,

Bruce Venables
